5 Recent Trends for Photographing Your Wedding!

One of the most special days of your life is approaching. To capture every moment, wedding photography is still a key element of your day. Wedding albums have morphed into digital vehicles that are much more modern and active in how you share your memories. Here are some great ideas to consider.

Telling a Story Using Props

People like to have fun. They like to play, especially at weddings. You and your loved one may have some special items that hold a key memory, or mark a key moment in time – that instant when you knew this person was the one. It can be a special seashell from the beach where you two walked; it can be a special mask that you can hold over your lips, eyes or nose. Your family will have fun with the props, and they can be featured in many candid pictures from the wedding!

Wedding Themes

You always wanted to be Cinderella and your spouse is your handsome Prince. Or you really enjoyed Aladdin and have found your Princess Jasmine. Whatever the theme, you can add items to the wedding tables or wear special clothing – people will quickly understand a special theme that adds to the occasion.

Bold Colors

Sounds simple, but true wedding photography can also be artwork. The colors in the punch bowl, the bows on the wedding chairs, the tablecloths and the flower arrangements can all become art. Many color shots can be reproduced and used as a picture. Creativity just went to the next level!

Ditch the Photo Album

Your mother's album was fun to look at – but you couldn't do anything with it. Aunt Sarah in California couldn't see the wedding in its entirety – just the few photos you sent. Wedding DVDs and CDs are now the norm. You can send Aunt Sarah the DVD and she'll have the entire wedding for her viewing pleasure.

Photojournal Pictures

Elusive but special – that particular look that tells a story. Write down five ideas you want the wedding photography to capture and tell your photographer. A picture really can be worth a thousand words! Plan early, have fun, and capture your memories for a lifetime!
